away.

The police learned that the burgiary had been carefully planned. About 18 o'clock last night the prisoner hired a room in the lodging-house at 302 Bowery. He said he wanted a room on the top floor, and got it. It is supposed that his confederate went there later. They climbed through the scuttle of the lodging-house and crossed over to the roof of No. 304. The lodging-house is a four-story building, but 304 is about sight feet lower than the lodging-house. The bouses Nos. 304. 308 and 110 are two-story and attic structures, with sianting roofs, which are about twenty feet below the roof of No. 304.

The burgians, however, climbed down a tall chimney and so got on to the root of 305. Then they made their way slowly along the ledge of the sianting roofs across the three houses and got on the roof of the cigar factory. They bored holes around the scuttle, sawed a part of it away and forced it open. Once lastde, they made themselves at home.

They must have spent several hours in the place, as they left evidence of that behind. Mr. Jacoby's office is on the second floor right by the front windows. The marauders went through two desks, overhauled everything and scattered the contents, including private papers, all over the floor. They heiped themselves liberally to cigars while themselves liberally to cigars while they were at work.

The windows of Mr. Jacoby's office look right out on the elevated road, and the people in passing trains could easily have seen the burglars at work. In one corner of the office stands a safe. After going through the desks and finding ing of value the burglars turned attention to the safe. It is evident they labored with it for a long before they finally discovered that is not locked.

They also say they will enter the Tankee Doodle in a sweepstakes race for 500 to $1,000 a corner against any yachts afloat the same distance, any kind of water, the winner to take all.

These tools the burgiars found factory. They went through the Bala after finding it was open, but the containing of value they found was a pocketbook belonging to Mr. Jacoby, which contained some bonds of the Progress Club and three pawn tickets. One was for a gold bracelet, on which Els had been loaned. Another was for a diamond bracelet, $150, and one for a diamond bracelet, $150, and one for a diamond pin on which till back. burgiars next proceeded to effect

The burgiars next proceeded to effect an entrance into the clothing store by a saving a hole in the flooring over a stairway leading downstairs. Here they picked up the articles mentioned, and, it being daylight by this time, they left the building the same way they came.

Beterador's confederate must have gone first, as nothing was seen of him. Hand it was only when the prisoner was it crossing the roof with the bundle that he attracted attention.

When searched at the station-house half a dozen fine rip-saw were found in Beterador's possession. The pocket-book containing Mr. Jacoby's bonds and pawn tickets was found in his room in the lodging-house.
